Fun Facts

- Slovakia gained independence from Czechoslovakia on January 1, 1993. The same day, it formed its own constitution.
- Approximately 90 percent of the Slovaks have secondary education, which is among the highest rates in the European Union.
- The women of Slovakia—along with Lithuania and Poland—are the youngest to marry (at around 24 years) in the European Union.

A small Central European country and a new member of the European Union as of May 2004, Slovakia is a treasury of natural beauty and ethnic diversity. It is a land of immense forests, lakes, and rivers at the heartland of the Carpathian mountains.

Its present territory was ruled by the Hungarians for most of its history, though the Slavs settled here in the 8th century. Due to its outstanding location on the Danube, wedged between the Germanic northwest and the Hungarian southeast, the small Slavic nation of 5.4 million entered the 20th century as part of the Hungarian kingdom under the Habsburgs. It jointly created Czechoslovakia in 1919 and eventually reached full independence in 1993. It is currently enjoying increasing economic progress; winter tourism, dairy production, wood processing, and mining are major activities. The Slovaks—hospitable people very ready to welcome visitors from afar—are true to their unique identity and proud of their traditions.
